

Floaties

Water sports and recreation are a way of life for Southern California families.

Whether it's a Saturday at the beach or a summer afternoon by the pool, safety is just as big a concern for parents as making sure kids have fun.

Floaties Swim School owners/operators, Mike and Karyn Morrill know firsthand the importance of teaching children—and parents!—water safety as well as water skills.

Lessons and classes for children age 3-months and up are conducted in their state-of-the-art swimming pool. Designed with safety features such as teaching benches, the crystal clear water is a constant 92 degrees and maintained with a salt-purification system which is softer on the skin and prevents red, itchy eyes.

Centrally located in Poway, Floaties Swim School has enjoyed such success that they are soon to expand to an indoor location.

The new facility will allow Mike and Karyn to offer water aerobics and water polo.

Teaching swim lessons was a natural choice for Mike, an avid athlete and All-American water polo champion in high school. After floating from home to home giving private lessons, which eventually lead to the school's name, the couple decided to set up a permanent location. Now the only floating is done by young students.
